honors the 2008 tenure and promotion of

Christine Malone

Psychology

Schacter, Daniel L. Searching for Memory: The Brain, the Mind, and the Past.
Basic Books, 1996

Associate Professor Malone chose this book because:

I was in graduate school having to read many scholarly research articles on memory and my zest for the topic was fading. Then I found this book. Schacter does a great job of covering the research as a means to solve some intriguing memory mysteries. Is it possible to forget past traumatic events and then accurately remember them later on in life? How is it possible for amnesia patients to remember some types of memories but not others? Schacter maintains a sense of wonder and amazement about the human brain while relating supporting empirical evidence. This balance revived my interest memory research.
